

Aliyah Najm, whose first name means “one who strives to be high in social standards” and last name means “star”, is nothing less than stellar. She is a mother, business woman and philanthropist. Najm, mother of GRAMMY Award winning artist T-Pain, has been involved in several business ventures including the restaurant, financial and entertainment industries. One of her most meaningful endeavors is her nonprofit organization, Caregivers 911, Inc. which she founded in 2011.

Many organizations and foundations focus on illnesses and those who are sick. What differentiates Caregivers 911, Inc. is that it focuses on individuals, known as caregivers who take care of loved ones who are terminally ill or has a lifelong illness. It offers a variety of services which provide support, education and relief for this vastly underserved group. Najm’s passion for this organization stems from the fact that Najm worked in the medical field for over 20 years and she is a caregiver herself- she cares for her 37 year old son who has kidney failure.

Aliyah Najm is a trailblazer in Atlanta’s community. She is using her influence to help better the lives of those who for so long have had no voice. With unmatched style and grace, she indubitably belongs among the “Who’s Who in Black Atlanta”.